With Your Health In Mind

It is allergy season again. There is no cure for allergies, but there are several medications used to control the symptoms. The medications include prescription and over-the-counter products such as antihistamines, decongestants, corticosteroids, and others. These products are often used together to make allergy season more bearable.

When you have an allergic reaction, your body releases a substance called histamine, which attaches to receptors in blood vessels causing them to enlarge. Histamine causes redness, swelling, itching and changes in secretions. Antihistamines work by blocking the receptors that the histamine attaches to. Over-the-counter antihistamines include Bendryl, Claritin, and Triaminic. Clarinex, Allegra, and Zyrtec are prescription antihistamines.

Decongestants relive congestion and are usually given with antihistamines. They work by shrinking swollen nasal tissues and blood vessels to relieve the symptoms of nasal swelling, congestion, mucous secretion and redness. Phenylephrine and pseudoephedrine are decongestants available over-the-counter. They can also be found in combination with prescription medications like Zyrtec. However, you must present a picture ID when buying products that contain pseudoephedrine. The pharmacist must also record your address and the amount that you purchase. This done to prevent purchases of large quantities which may be used to manufacture methamphetamine.

Corticosteroids reduce inflammation related to allergic reactions. They are available as pills, for serious allergies or asthma, inhalers, for asthma, nasal sprays, for seasonal or year-round allergies, creams, for skin allergies or as an eye drop, for allergic conjunctivitis. Nasal sprays such as Rhinocort, Flonase, and Nasocort, used to treat nasal allergy symptoms. Beclovent, Pulmicort, and Flovent, are steroid inhalers used to treat asthma. Prednisone is available orally for serious allergic reactions.

Other medications including mast cell stabilizers and lieukotriene modifiers are used in conjunction with the previously discussed medications. Mast cell stabilizer, such as Crolom and Nasalcrom, work by stopping the release of histamine from mast cells (cells that make and store histamine). Lieukotriene modifiers block the affects of lieukotriene, a chemical produced in the body during an allergic reaction. Singular and Accolate are the only two available lieukotriene modifiers.

Immunotherapy, or allergy shots, may be the most effective form of treatment if you suffer from severe allergies or have allergies more than three months of the year. These shots expose you to gradually increasing levels of the offending allergen to help your immune system build tolerance.

Sustaining Supporter

The last four years have seen many changes come to the Community Center. After much hard work, with the support of the community, we were able to pay off the mortgage and become one of a few GLBT Center's owned by its community. Shortly after, attentions turned to a much needed make over of the front meeting room. And recently the roof, eaves and heat and air system were replaced. In the coming weeks, you will see the results of your continued support as the building gets a much needed face-lift. We are now dedicating ourselves to making sure the Community Center stays fresh and vibrant through landscape maintenance and repair of the front wall. This work can only continue with the support of our members. We would like to offer our members a chance to become:

Sustaining Supporters:

For as little as 10.00 dollars a month, Keep the yard clipped & buff, the lights on and support continued efforts to expand services to the community.

Please consider supporting your community center by becoming a Sustaining Supporter. You can mail a check made payable to Harriet Hancock Center to HHC, PO Box 12648, Columbia, SC. Include in the memo field "Sustaining Supporter". Or you may visit www.scglpm.org and click on SUPPORT to pay via the web.

Biology of Sexual Orientation Subject of Talk at The Center Project

March 22, 2007 @ 7pm

Are people born gay? Actor Bill Oberst Jr. steps out of character to examine the surprising science behind that question on March 22, 7:00 pm at The Center Project, 307 Highway 15, Myrtle Beach. The public is invited to attend and admission is free.

Oberst, who performs in theaters and colleges across the country, spent a year researching the subject for his play, "Xq28." The science fiction script envisions a future in which one's sexual orientation can be changed through genetic therapy, but Oberst's presentation "In His Image" sticks strictly to the facts. "While writing the play, I became engrossed in the world of genetics and the search for the biological origins of sexual orientation," he says. "Research on the topic only started in the 1990's and much is not yet known, but what has been discovered is truly striking." Oberst will discuss the known, the unknown and the still-in-question, using the latest scientific research findings. He'll also put things into historical context by looking at how science and sexual orientation have intersected in the past.

About Bill Oberst Jr.

Oberst is well-known to church audiences for his portrayal, "Jesus of Nazareth," and to secular ones for his recreations of notable men of history like Mark Twain and John F. Kennedy in their own words. "In His Image" is his latest project. He plans to present it to church and civic groups across the South.

If you've ever wondered how you or someone you love came to be "that way" you can't miss this fascinating and fun presentation by a man who is passionate about his subject matter.

Bisexual Gay and Lesbian Straight Alliance

Second Annual Pride Conference at USC

This year's Pride Conference has two aims: first, we will discuss how to get your campus aware to gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered issues and activity. Secondly, we will discuss how to integrate this campus into the community at large. We have several wonderful speakers this year, including Dr. Ed Madden and the fabulous Pat Patterson. In addition, the BGLSA executive staff will be hosting workshops to talk about membership retention and promotion.

This year we also wanted to add a little something extra. BGLSA will be hosting two balls, one the night before and one the evening of the Pride Conference, to give you extra social activities to attend and meet some of the fellow leaders from across South Carolina.

So, please accept this invitation to attend the second annual Pride Conference. I promise you it will be a wonderful event that will help unify the great organizations throughout this state. Once you RSVP to this invitation, more information will follow including your information packets, directions, and hotels in the area. I hope to see you later this month!
